adequate care. Respondent discontinued an intravenous Nipride infusion on a patient with a cerebral hemorrhage instead of titrating¹ the Nipride infusion down, as ordered by the physician. The intravenous Nipride infusion was not to be discontinued until the patient had started oral anti-hypertensives and the patient's blood pressure was stable. Furthermore, Respondent failed to administer and/or document the administration of the oral anti-hypertensive medication when the patient had a systolic pressure over 220, as ordered by the physician. The patient's cerebral hemorrhage continued and the patient was made a "do not resuscitate" patient as a result of the continued cerebral hemorrhage.

¹ Titration is an operation, used in volumetric analysis, in which a measured amount of one solution is added to a known quantity of another solution until the reaction between the two is complete. If the concentration of one solution is known, that of the other can be calculated. To titrate is to measure the volume or concentration of solutions by titration.
